Community Engagement & Social Responsibility is 2 Credit Course
(One Credit is for Theory and One Credit is for Field Work).

India is a country of villages; therefore, rural development is the fundamental need of its progress. This course describes the various dimensions of rural life and its development in India. It advocates the importance of community development through self help groups. The course emphasises on the health and well-being of villagers. In addition to this, the concepts of literacy and employment have been elaborated in the context of rural culture and multi-dimensional development of rural India.

This course highlights the contribution of social networking as a bridge between the various government schemes and the people of India. Sensitivity towards the environment and education, safety and energy, enthusiasm towards physical, mental and spiritual health along with single living and high thinking have been explained for better understanding of the students. The course also outlines the benefits of community engagement through research and innovation. Students will be able to understand the various problems of any community and the possible ways to address the same.

Since communities in India have their own knowledge derived from their ancestors and lived experiences, the students need to respect and learn from them so that they can further contribute for the betterment of other communities. In a nut shell, this course will help the students to connect with the true spirit of the nation.
